A MAN BUILT IN ST. LOUIS.

A Brief but Exciting Account.

St. Louis, Democrat of August 31.

Yesterday at noon an ox, small but vigorous, appeared in the neighborhood of Eighteenth and Chestnut streets.

Whether the ox had opened her ponderous jaws to eat him forth, or he had been lured, a church-boy, a little boy, named from some local North, no one could say.

"At first the bull trotted along, mildly in quisitive, toward Seventh street, till he reached the corner of Chestnut and Seventh, where he stopped for a moment and then, with a sudden dash, he

THE ERIE FIRE.

Total Destruction of the Reed House.

Incidents of the Conflagration.

Loss $350,000. Partially insured.

It gave below particulars of the disaster.

Fire in Erie which occurred on Wednesday night.

The Dispatch reports say:

Between nine and ten last evening the cry of fire was heard, and looking from the window of our editorial room, a number of people were seen running toward French street. Descending rapidly to the street and following the tide around to the corner of Fifth and French, it was quickly apparent that the roof of the Reed House was in flames. The street was filled with smoke, and a strong odor of burning pine, and an occasional flash of flame brought the darkness overhead.

Inside the office, we found Mr. Sum Pison and the clerks anxiously surveying the scene, and nervously giving orders to servants which seemed to be rarely obeyed.

Indeed, the servants seemed frightened at their senses, and there was a constant stream of them rushing up and down the stairs, with bundles of clothing, sheets and trunks in their hands. Returning to the street, some fifteen or twenty minutes after the alarm had been sounded, a steamer standing on Fifth street, near French. The loss was being unceasingly passed through the arching into the court of the hotel. A gentleman expressed regret at the fire.

For trying to reach the fire in such a ward and roundabout way, when it was so easy to take the hose to the rear of the Dispatch building, whence an unobstructed passage would have been secured, and and a stream of water thrown directly upon the fire. Some of the Reed House to follow the suggestion, when their leader told them to pay no attention to outsiders and to follow him. The fire was carried into the court, and from the roof of the laundry—a one-story half-story structure—the water was thrown. The water was thrown from the roof of the three or four stories above the fire.

The fire was within easy reach.

The suggestion was treated with contempt, and the water was not thrown. The fire was
